Why is it that the following line `val summary = df.rdd.count()` is returning null for the rdd object? And why is it that in the error I received the last line of `df.rdd.count()` is a non defined function `rdd: org.apache.spark.sql.Row` It doesn't say anything about the RDD type, so I'm assuming it just means any type of object that the RDD's method can accept. A: Because rdd in Spark refers to the internal object that controls the execution of the Spark context. This object is not meant to be accessible directly, but if you look at the code: `object RDD { def apply[K](rdd: RDD[K], kryo: org.apache.kafka.common.serialization.Kryo) = new KafkaRDD[K, K](rdd, kryo) }` This means that the method apply receives the RDD object as an argument and you can use it as `b7e8fdf5c8`
